Plaintiffs' letter of December 1, 2014, is jaw-dropping, both in content and timing.¹ Not only does it proceed from a deliberate misreading of our Individual Practices, but the letter's proposal threatens to overwhelm this Court with unhelpful briefing.

Brevity is not just the soul of wit; it is the soul of persuasive argument as well. Often "the shorter briefs . . . are the most helpful, perhaps because the discipline of compression forces the parties to explain clearly and succinctly what has happened, the precise legal issue, and just why they believe the law supports them." In re M.S.V., Inc., 892 F.2d 5, 6 (1st Cir. 1989).

To be sure, it would be easier for plaintiffs' counsel not to engage in such discipline. As Benjamin Franklin is supposed to have told a correspondent, "If I had more time, I would have written a shorter letter."

Here, defendants offered plaintiffs an obvious road map for a sensible briefing structure. Defendants divided the legal issues presented in their single joint motion to dismiss into seven discrete topics, and submitted seven memoranda totalling a modest 175 pages.² Plaintiffs should have taken the cue to submit a single brief in opposition to each of defendants' briefs.

Instead, plaintiffs took a frivolous position that each plaintiff is separately entitled to file 25 pages in response to each argument addressed in defendants' briefs on a single motion to dismiss.³ We find no support anywhere for plaintiffs' professed belief that each party in a consolidated case may each submit separate briefs up to the page limit for each argument raised.⁴ Cf. United States v. Ashman, 964 F.2d 596 (7th Cir. 1992) (per curiam) (striking 438 pages of "redundant and uncoordinated filings" and directing litigants to file a joint 75-page brief); Order, Micash Inc. v. NetSpend Corp., No. 2:12-cv-248-JRG, ECF No. 68 (E.D. Tex. June 5, 2013) (striking briefs sua sponte when two defendants filed separate briefs each equal to the page limit); Stillaguamish Tribe of Indians v. Nelson, No. C10-327 RAJ, 2013 WL 1661244 at *1 n.1 (W.D. Wash. Apr. 17, 2013) (criticizing defendants' strategy of filing separate briefs in order to circumvent page limits); United States v. Sierra Pac. Indus., No. CIV S-09-2445 KJM-EFB, 2012 WL 175071 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 20, 2012) (striking separate briefs that circumvented page limits).

² This is an average of 25 pages per brief, which is in line with our customary limit of 25 pages for opening briefs. With permission, defendants filed one brief over the 25-page limit and compensated by reducing the lengths of two other briefs. Additionally, Société Générale used 16 pages to brief its separate motion to dismiss.

Up to now, counsel in this MDL have successfully controlled their egos and their desire to bill hours, in order to provide the Court with manageable submissions. It is regrettable that the Direct Action Plaintiffs were unwilling to conform their conduct to such a professional approach. Having submitted an absurd proposal, plaintiffs' counsel compel this Court to set the rules.

Accordingly, we deny plaintiffs' motion (ECF No. 857 in No. 11 MDL 2262), and we direct plaintiffs to submit briefs whose total page count shall be at most 225 pages.⁵ Targeted and organized point-by-point collective responses would clearly be of the greatest benefit to the Court and the parties.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

⁵ We arrive at this limit as 25 pages for each of the seven briefs that the defendants submitted in support of their joint motion, an additional 25 pages to compensate for our decision to grant defendants an additional 25 pages on one of their briefs, and an additional 25 pages to respond to Société Générale's separate motion.
